“One Another”

Have we neglected an important part of Christian living? We devote a good amount of time loving God which makes sense because it is “the great and foremost commandment” (Mt. 22:38). We allocate considerable time to personal spiritual growth. Again, this is important because each one of us will stand before the judgment seat of Christ and give an account for the life he or she has lived (2Cor. 5:10).

While we are doing some good and important things, have we given enough thought to our responsibilities toward one another? We are the body of Christ and individually members one of another (Rom. 12:5). Have you and I appropriately nurtured our relationship with one another?

There are more than twenty-five commandments in the New Testament for how we are to treat each other. A few of them are repeated several times. When we are fulfilling our mutual responsibilities to one another the body of Christ is healthy, every member’s needs are being met, it is self-healing, unified, pure, protected, attractive, and glorifying God.

Here's the list of our mutual responsibilities: Be at peace with... serve... love... be devoted to... give preference to... be of the same mind toward... do not judge... pursue the building up of... accept... admonish... greet... do not defraud... wait for... have the same care for...show tolerance for... be kind to... speak to... submit to... regard as more important... do not lie to... comfort... encourage... seek that which is good for... stimulate... do not speak against... do not complain against... confess your sins to... and be hospitable to one another.

Join me each Sunday morning during our worship service for a presentation of God’s instructions on how we should treat one another. Let’s strive to be the body of Christ which God envisions.
